As a longtime vintage collector, 28-year-old Dallas designer Brynn Isom uses antique garments as templates for her retro-glamorous clothing. "It all started with an old dress I bought at an estate sale," she explains. "I cut it up and reconstructed it into a tunic. I got so many compliments on it that I used the pattern to make fancier versions in silk." Most of Isom's pieces evolve like this: Original '60s and '70s items are disassembled, revised, sewn back together, then reproduced in brightly colored fabrics, with crochet, handwoven ribbon, and other embellishments. Our favorites include a swingy corduroy minidress with hand-beaded details and a mod, split-sleeve silk blouse garnished with metal-fiber trim. Available at LFT (2350 Victory Park Ln., 214-635-2150).
